Anoka Faruqee: Future Perfect

Moiré paintings have been trending for some time. Blame it on Photoshop making it easy for all types of psychedelic, eye-squinting squiggles to pop up on screens, but it's no new fad; there's a long history in op-art (think Bridget Riley) of putting viewers' eyes through contortionistic exercises. Faruqee's one of this recent generation playing around with moiré in relationship to digital screens, and she's been at it for over 10 years (she began with the more analogue though, banana peels). While we haven't seen the paintings yet, we're willing to make it out to see the pickings.
